An assessment identified that the site lay in the environs of an ancient hedgerow as well as a prehistoric, Roman and Saxon settlement and a medieval manor site. There was no evidence to suggest that any of these sites continued into the study area, although it was thought possible. Construction of a football pitch at the site was thought to have extensively truncated remains. [Au(abr)]

The assessment was carried out in advance of a proposed foodstore development. The site is located in the centre of a medieval village, recent nearby excavations revealed evidence for Roman-post-medieval activity in the area. A Saxon child burial was also found in the cemetery associated with the nearby church, which could extend further than its current known boundaries. Although there was no evidence of archaeological deposits within the study area, there could be an earlier, predecessor of the current Hadleigh Hall building. [Au(adp)]

An assessment was carried out in advance of future development. Part of the site had been severely truncated by the construction of the reservoir and other recent development. The site in general was thought to have a low archaeological potential. [Au(abr)]

The assessment was particularly concerned with assessing the archaeological potential of the Palaeolithic material for the site, as Palaeolithic hand axes and elephant remains had previously been recorded. Reference to post-medieval and modern cartographic sources revealed that much of the site area had been quarried in the early part of the 20th century and the remainder built over. This level of disturbance suggested that the survival of archaeological deposits was unlikely, excepting deep ground works in the area of the shops.[Au(adp)]
