The parcel of land still showed evidence of the original medieval system of open field farming. These fields were owned alternately and cultivated by the joint labour of people living in the village community. The land was divided into two parts which represented the old arable and the meadow. The quantity of land in the 19th century was still the same as in 1699. Today the field was under grass and part of the extensive grounds of the property known as Green Acres. [Au(abr)]
