Work undertaken by: Oxford Archaeological Associates

An archaeological assessment was carried out on the proposed development area. The assessment identified no archaeology for the proposed development site, but identified that the site was in close vicinity of archaeology ranging from the prehistoric to medieval periods. This archaeology included two Roman forts. Further work was recommended. [Au(abr)]

THE WIRRINAAn Archaeological Desk-Based Assessment of the Wirrina, Peterborough

Appleby, S Twickenham : AOC Archaeology Group, 2003, 55pp, figs, refs

Work undertaken by: AOC Archaeology Group

There was demonstrable evidence that a considerable amount of archaeology survived in the vicinity of the site. This was especially true of the prehistoric, Romano-British, Anglo-Saxon, medieval and post-medieval periods. Due to the proximity and potential for archaeology in the area of the study (including one findspot within the proposed development) the likelihood of disturbing in situ archaeology was considered high. An archaeological assessment was carried out on the proposed development site. No archaeology was known, but it was identified as being in the vicinity of Romano-British, Saxon, medieval and post-medieval archaeology. The assessment concluded that the potential for in situ archaeology was high. [Au(abr)]
