An evaluation was carried out in advance of extensions and improvements to the site facilities. A history of alluvium over lias clays was noted across the site. In trench 4 the base of a broad stone wall with a pitched stone surface on the north side with unpitched paving on the south was interpreted as the wall and floors of a small agricultural building, dated by finds to the 3rd-4th century. Proposals were put forward to excavate less of the overburden in this area of the site. [Au(abr)]

An evaluation was carried out in relation to a park and ride development. Three Mesolithic flint blades were recovered as well as some prehistoric pottery and Samian ware. The majority of the features recorded dated from the post-medieval period and consisted of field boundaries and drainage features. It was not thought that development would unearth any previously unrecorded features. [Au(abr)]

An evaluation was carried out to record the specific location of the chapel, bombed out in 1942. Heavily truncated sections of the north and south walls were located, as well as other walls and a floor below where the altar would have been, perhaps indicating a room below the chapel. Mitigation was discussed in light of the proposed development. [Au(abr)]
