An evaluation and building survey was carried out in advance of development. Only limited evidence for medieval occupation was noted. An 18th century structure with a square central plinth may have had an industrial use or been part of a garden feature. Fragments of 19th century wall indicated parts of the buildings featured on maps. The building survey recorded all relevant standing structures. [Au(abr)]

An archaeological evaluation was carried out in advance of a mixed development. A similar sequence of deposits was identified throughout the evaluation. Alluvial deposits at the base were sealed by imported make up-layers, probably associated with the construction of the 19th century buildings, the walls of which were identified in the trenches. Later development had sealed these deposits. [Au(abr)]

An evaluation was carried out in advance of the construction of an office block with car parking. The remains of houses fronting on to the pre-war alignment of Temple Street were found, along with deposits underlying the houses. Evidence for the survival of organic remains in the marsh deposits under the houses was also discovered. [Au(abr)]

An evaluation was carried out in advance of a new office development. Archaeological remains of regional importance were present in the footprint of the building, and also in the car park to the west. Deeply stratified deposits of medieval and post-medieval date were well preserved in these areas owing to the land filling that took place in the 18th century with the Great Gardens development. This evaluation involved excavating test pits within the site to try and determine the original layout of a post-medieval lodge which had been demolished, with the aim to rebuild it. The original foundations were located, but no photographic evidence was found to show the original appearance of the building.
