An evaluation at the site revealed no archaeological deposits. It was thought that cropmarks at the site had been caused by a truncated feature that was no longer evident. Two fragments of Iron Age or Roman pottery were the only items of note. [Au(abr)]

The evaluation revealed evidence of prehistoric activity in the form of a series of pits, multiple field ditches and an isolated post hole and pit. Pottery from the pits in the south-western corner of the site and from the post hole were dated to between the late Bronze Age and middle Iron Age suggesting the site was on the edge of a prehistoric settlement and agricultural land associated with arable farming. The link road evaluation found negligible evidence for previous occupation on the site. This was limited to two Roman ditches and a series of demolished modern farm buildings and associated features. A pillbox was also noted located in the north-east corner of the site. [Au(abr)]
