The amount of modern disturbance encountered on site was quite limited, and this means that there was a very high probability that the absence of archaeological evidence from these closely spaced trenches indicated that the development would not disturb anything of archaeological value. [Au(adp)]

An evaluation was carried out in advance of a new housing development. Probable Neolithic activity in the form of flint scatters was found, as well as a range of features indicative of a Middle to Late Iron Age settlement comprising pits, a ring-gully and a ditch. A sherd of Italian amphora may have suggested a higher status than a simple farmstead. [Au(abr)]

Keir, W Hertford : Archaeological Solutions, 2003, 12pp, figs, refs

Work undertaken by: Archaeological Solutions

This evaluation revealed no archaeological deposits despite the potential for features of prehistoric date in this part of the Thames valley. Before the construction of the modern building the site was undeveloped agricultural land, becoming part of the formal gardens associated with the Horton Grange.
