Monitoring of footings at the site provided evidence for a large ditch or pond running close to the road frontage. An excavation was carried out on the site of a structure identified in 1998. A 4.5m diameter pit with a central post hole was identified, this was interpreted as the base of a sunken post mill. The excavation was a follow-up to those carried out in 1999. Bronze Age pottery was recovered from a field drain, and a trench was opened up in the area previously identified as a Neolithic pit. A buried early medieval ploughsoil was removed, and Mesolithic worked flints were found to occupy natural features, perhaps indicating some exploitation of the surrounding area and valley bottom. A large north-south aligned boundary ditch ran across the length of the site and which was tentatively dated to the Late Neolithic, with use carrying on into the Bronze Age. Two phases of re-cutting had occurred. Finds of Neolithic, Bronze Age and Iron Age date indicated sporadic occupation of the site. Some Roman occupation was suggested by a single poorly dated pit and finds from the ploughsoil. [Au(abr)]

Ephemeral evidence of prehistoric and Late Saxon evidence was recorded, however, the primary evidence was medieval in date. A series of small fields and boundary ditches and a single pit marked activity in the 11th or 12th century, whilst a moated site was established in the 13th or 14th century. A trial excavation and full excavation was carried out on the proposed quarry site. The earliest phase identified comprised of 16 pits of Late Neolithic/Early Bronze Age date. These pits were identified as containing possibly deliberately deposited flint and pottery. The second phase identified comprised of four Late Bronze Age pits. A significant amount of prehistoric finds was also recovered from the topsoil and subsoil. A post-medieval rectangular enclosure was identified and was interpreted as a 17th century garden folly associated with Flixton Hall. The remains of trenches and latrine pits were identified, relating to the use of the site as a training camp during the 1st World War. [Au(abr)]
