Work undertaken by: CKC Archaeology

The timbers salvaged from the river were recorded and thought to be either bridge supports or part of a bank revetment. Two tie pieces were also recovered and these were used to tie piles and other revetting timbers into the bank. They are thought to have been commonly used in the River Wey navigations. [Au(adp)]

Thirteen evaluation trenches identified ephemeral multi-period activity across the site. Subsequently, an open area excavation revealed that these remains represented an important occupation site dateable to the later Mesolithic. Pits were also found which might have been associated with the occupation. [Au(abr)]
