An archaeological excavation was carried out next to the Grade II listed house. The remains of an ornamental garden with a pond as its central feature was identified. A brick chambered toilet built over an earlier stone lined cess pit was identified. A post hole and the toilet's location next to the boundary wall suggests that the structure was originally within a timber framed building. [Au(abr)]

An archaeological watching brief was carried out on topsoil stripping at the site. Three pits containing Saxon tap slag were identified, suggesting that they were used as tapping pits during iron smelting. Four other pits were identified containing evidence of in situ burning, which may have been used as the base of furnaces. Post-medieval pits and a post hole were also identified. [Au(abr)]
