A watching brief was undertaken during renovation works of the 13th century church, specifically the dismantling of the churchyard wall. The church lied at the southern end of a small Roman town, although no archaeological deposits dating to this period were identified within the study area. No significant archaeological deposits were revealed except earlier undated walls. [Au(adp)]

A watching brief was carried out on groundworks for a new house. A post-medieval ditch was identified containing medieval pottery, eleven sherds of Roman pottery and possible Roman animal bone. The animal bone showed signs of gnawing and butchery chopping marks. The Roman pottery strongly suggested Roman occupation nearby the study area. The substantial post-medieval ditch could have been an enclosure or property boundary. [Au(adp)]
