An archaeological watching brief was undertaken during groundworks for a building extension. It was apparent during the course of this work that the proposed extension would to an extent be located in the same area as a former west wing of the building. Finds retrieved from associated demolition debris were dated to the later 18th century. A capped brick built well was also observed during the work. Scarring on the surviving face of the Grade II Listed early 18th century farmhouse also served to illustrate the location of the demolished structure. [Au(adp)]

Archaeological Survey of Land at the Hope Limestone Quarry, Near Dirtlow Rake, Derbyshire

Badcock, A Sheffield : ARCUS, 2004, 24pp, colour pls, figs, tabs, refs

Work undertaken by: ARCUS

An archaeological survey was undertaken in advance of mineral extraction. The survey identified several features of archaeological interest within the study area. The upstanding remains of stone-built enclosures which could have been prehistoric in date were recorded. The largest enclosure could also have had an associated ditch. The enclosures were thought likely to be related to stock husbandry but could also be related to a prehistoric temporary settlement. A possible building platform was also identified. The remains of late 17th century stone enclosure walls and extensive remains of lead mining activity were also recorded. The potential of the site was seen as high and further work was recommended in order to understand the recorded remains better. [Au(adp)]

Archaeological monitoring and assessment was undertaken during groundworks for a new conservatory. In 1903-04 during the development of the area for housing, a number of building floors, paved areas and Roman artefacts including Samian Ware were found. It had been speculated that due to pottery finds dating to AD 60-100 that the area had been the site of the Roman Fort of Aquae Arnemetiae or associated vicus. However, only finds of 19th and 20th century date were found during the conservatory construction. [AIP]

Clements, A Sleaford : Archaeological Project Services, 2004, 9pp, colour pls, figs, refs

Work undertaken by: Archaeological Project Services

A watching brief was undertaken during groundworks for a building extension. The site lay in the historic core of the village, close to the Church of All Saints, dating to the 13th century. The watching brief revealed limited modern and post-medieval activity, overlying a phase of undated, apparently natural deposition. Finds retrieved included three sherds of post-medieval pottery and two pieces of modern glass. One piece of pressed asbestos was also recovered, although this was discarded after. [Au(adp)]

Work undertaken by: University of Leicester Archaeological Services

A watching brief was maintained during work to extend a sand and gravel quarry. Work was undertaken from December 2003 to August 2004 and this report provided an overview of all of the results. Work was undertaken in areas to the south, south-west, north and north-west of a Neolithic causewayed enclosure (SAM 30089) which occupied part of the area and was excluded from gravel extraction. Archaeological features were very dispersed with few concentrations of activity or even dateable deposits. Features included a post-medieval field boundary and undated pits and post holes. [Au(adp)]

An archaeological watching brief was undertaken during the machine excavation of 134 holes for the removal of 22 pylons and the erection of 48 poles. Little evidence of archaeological significance was identified, apart from post-medieval finds. However the work did facilitate the compilation of a simple record of the character, extent and thickness of alluvial deposits at intervals along a transect through the floor of the Trent Valley. During the course of the fieldwork, a note was made of possible archaeologically significant features on neighbouring land. [Au(adp)]

A watching brief was undertaken during groundworks for a new dwelling and boundary wall. Saxon pottery had been found in the village and the site sat close to the medieval core of the village. This was best represented by the 13th century St. Andrew's Church. Earthworks of this period had also been recorded in the vicinity. The watching brief revealed a sequence of natural and topsoil deposits. No archaeological deposits were encountered and no artefacts retrieved. [Au(adp)]

An archaeological watching brief was undertaken during groundworks associated with the construction of a two storey block of flats. The site was archaeologically sensitive, lying in the historic core of the medieval town. Northgate was recorded as le Northgate as early as 1501AD. The work identified a wide, shallow pit-like feature and two other probable ditches dateable to the Saxo-Norman period. Also uncovered was a feature of uncertain function from the post-medieval period and a modern drain. [Au(adp)]

A watching brief was undertaken during the groundworks for a new house. Iron Age and Romano-British features were known from the vicinity of the village. To the north of the village was Saxon iron smelting site. The site lay within the core of the medieval village, close to the 12th century church. The watching brief revealed a sequence of natural, subsoil and topsoil deposits. An undated wall was also recorded, believed to be of 18th century date. Finds retrieved included a range of 18th-20th century pottery and glass and a single animal bone fragment. [Au(adp)]

Cope-Faulkner, P Sleaford : Archaeological Project Services, 2004, 8pp, colour pls, figs, refs

Work undertaken by: Archaeological Project Services

A watching brief was undertaken during groundworks in a churchyard. Both the church and the churchyard wall were Listed structures (Grade I and II respectively). The church was dated to the medieval period with the earliest portion dating to the 12th century with restorations, rebuilding and additions made in the 18th century. The work revealed a sequence of post-medieval graveyard soils, bounded by the churchyard wall, overlying natural geology. Recent paths and topsoil were also recorded. Finds retrieved included a single sherd of 18th century pottery and a range of medieval and post-medieval brick and tile. Roman or medieval smelting slag was also retrieved. [Au(adp)]
