The results of the desk-based assessment show that little is known about the site and its immediate vicinity archaeologically. The study has identified a general background potential for prehistoric use. Previous building development on the site has not been intensive and there is a possibility of localised low-density survival of rural archaeological cut features in the present garden areas. The study recommended further assessment by trial trenching. [Au(adp)] SMR primary record number: 24/312

It is clear from documentary, cartographic and archaeological sources that the area of the site was not situated in an area of high archaeological activity. The available evidence indicates that the site has not definitely been built upon until the early to mid 20th century. No further archaeological investigations are deemed necessary. [Au(abr)]
