The area was of rich archaeological potential, especially with regard to Roman remains. 18th century garden features may have also survived, although it was likely that the later development of stables would have removed these. The Roman Road ran north-east to south-west at about no 12 Crescent Lane. Significantly more archaeological work was recommended and contingency for the discovery of human remains was advised. The assessment was carried out in advance of development for a new building and associated car park. It was identified that although no direct evidence for the existence of significant archaeological remains exists, enough finds in the vicinity ensure that the area has archaeological potential. A programme of archaeological fieldwork was recommended. [Au(adp)]
