Barrow Hospital, Barrow Gurney. A Desk-Top Archaeological Assessment

Lewcun, M Bath : Bath Archaeological Trust, 2002, 25pp, figs, refs

Work undertaken by: Bath Archaeological Trust

The assessment was carried out in advance of the vacation of the hospital site. Very little in the way of archaeological potential was identified, although this was not taken to mean the absence of archaeology in the area. [Au(adp)]

Uphill Pill was a focus of activity for a wide local area as well as being a fairly important port. Archaeological sites in the area related to the harbour, drainage and flood protection and a water mill. The port displayed signs of military involvement as well as trade and exchange from the medieval period. The possibility of Roman and earlier activity was considered in the assessment. [Au(adp)]
