Two evaluation trenches were excavated on the north of the site. The evaluation has shown that the yard to the north of the existing building at 100 Church Street is composed of post-medieval period deposits. It is possible that evidence for activity earlier than the 19th century may survive under the standing building, which is unbasemented. [Au(adp)]

An archaeological evaluation on land at 606 Purley Way, Croyden was undertaken during October 2002. Potential archaeological features were encountered in Trench 1 in the form of eleven possible post holes. There were associated with no cultural material and may rather, be of natural origin. No archaeological finds or features were present in Trenches 2 and 3. [Au(abr)]

Two evaluation trenches were excavated and revealed no intact archaeological evidence. However, the remains of a timber staircase was still visible. It is recommended that these historic structures be recorded prior to demolition. It is possible that earlier deposits may survive in the area occupied by the buildings and otherwise potentially untruncated. [Au(adp)]
