An archaeological excavation was undertaken at the site. Late Bronze Age/Early Iron Age pits and wells were investigated, the latter containing wooden axe hafts, ladders and timber wattles. Post holes, a possible roundhouse, a four post structure and ditches from a field system were also dated to this period. Narrow Roman enclosures containing divisions and a quarry pit in one enclosure were encountered. Saxo-Norman remains were identified in the southern half of the site, consisting of quarry pits, and successive phases of boundary ditches. A Saxo-Norman well was also identified containing three animal skulls and wattle revetments. After the well was abandoned wood objects including a wheel fellow, a card-side rail top and an animal yoke were discarded in it. [Au(adp)]

Excavations and a subsequent watching brief found that the site was first occupied in the medieval period. During the 16th century the site was used for small industries and a range of new houses were built in the 1780s. These houses were demolished in the 20th century, making way for the Drill Hall and Government house, which was founded on immense concrete foundations. [Au(abr)]

B&Q Link Road, Fossett's Farm, Southend-on-Sea, Essex: Assessment Report on Archaeological Excavation

Wakeham, G Salisbury : Wessex Archaeology, 2005, 35pp, colour pls, figs, tabs, refs

Work undertaken by: Wessex Archaeology

Excavation has shown an extensive, complex development of prehistoric enclosures, with a field system, trackway and quarry complex. The other main phase of activity related to Saxon settlement. Other archaeological sites are known where Saxons have focused their settlement on an existing prehistoric monument such as the high status site of Springfield Lyons, Chelmsford, Essex. The Saxon settlement revealed so far comprised a sub-rectangular Saxon enclosure formed of inter-cutting gullies, that was later re-defined by domestic rubbish and cess-pits, cut through the former. Further enclosures and structures potentially extended to the west, east, north and south of Area D. Within the Saxon enclosure, a post hole and beam slot constructed building on the southern limit of the excavation in Area D. Another post hole constructed building, usually interpreted as a craft-working ancillary structure. A second SFB was partially revealed and excavated in Area C. [Au(abr)]

The moat was trapezoidal in plan and relatively small in size. On a raised platform within the moated area were the remains of two buildings. Relatively few finds were recovered. Documentary evidence indicated that the moated residence was abandoned between 1650 and 1677, and a new rectory built on the higher ground adjacent to Oak Street. Moated residences were a rarely investigated class of moated site, and following further analyses, it was proposed to submit a final report on the investigation at Fakenham for publication. An archaeological excavation was undertaken at the site after an earlier evaluation identified Roman and Bronze Age features. No prehistoric features except some possible undated/Iron Age ditches and pits were identified. Roman linear features and pits were identified, containing a quantity of pottery and tile. A ring ditch was identified but as this cut Roman features and was associated with a modern bank, it was interpreted as a possible World War II structure. [Au(adp)]

Ceders Park, Phase 4, Stowmarket, Suffolk: An Archaeological Excavation Interim Report
Marshall, G & Nicholson, K Hertford : Archaeological Solutions, 2005, 73pp, colour pls, figs,

Work undertaken by: Archaeological Solutions
The excavation of the site provided evidence for a mid to late Iron Age sub-square enclosure within which one definite and one possible roundhouse were located, as well as two groups of large pits to the north, one of which formed a circle. Sparse pits were spread across the eastern part of the enclosure and the area to its south and east. The orientation of the enclosure seemed to have been topographically determined, its two entrances facing directly up and down slope. [Au(abr)]
